

Tasmanian Dairy Effluent Management Contacts

June 2025

Managing effluent is one of the many priorities dairy farmers must consider each day.

A well-managed effluent system reduces business and environmental risk, while also providing potential cost savings through reusing the nutrients to grow grass, crops and build soil organics.

This handout aims to provide up-to-date contacts of service providers in the Tasmanian effluent management space. The contact details were updated in June 2025, but if you know of any service providers that are not listed, or if you are a service provider who would like to be included, contact DairyTas at 03 6432 2233 or admin@dairytas.net.au to be featured in future editions.

Contacts are listed in alphabetical order.

Effluent Designers

To update your Effluent Management Plan, or for technical assistance with design or expansion of effluent systems, contact an accredited Effluent Designer. The providers listed below have undertaken industry training and have access to the Effluent Design Toolkit software, which is used for correctly sizing storages, stone traps and other design features. Many of the providers are also certified in other areas, such as irrigation system, dam or building design.

Dairy installation and maintenance technicians and irrigation dealers can also provide general advice, quotes and installation/maintenance services for building and maintaining effluent systems, pumps, pipes and irrigators.

Effluent Spreading Contractors

No matter how good the effluent system design is, good management and regular maintenance is critical. Plan and budget for regular effluent system maintenance, including desludging of ponds and spreading of pond solids and other muck. Contact one of the following contractors for liquid, slurry or muck spreading.

Fert$mart/FertCare Advisors

Many farmers are now finding that when they get soil and fertiliser management 'right', they can produce more feed at no extra cost, and with precision soil testing and careful planning, fertiliser becomes a strategic tool to boost feed when it's most needed. Fert$mart and FertCare advisors provide farmers with the planning approach and the know-how to achieve this.

For advice on precision soil testing, nutrient mapping and nutrient management planning, contact one of the following providers.
